VOLUME 12, NO. 9

SACWN PRESENT:

COMEDIENNE SUZY BERGER

AND FEATURING SACWNITE
DANIELLE

With a New York accent and an attitude to go with it, Suzy Berger will charm you with fast paced comedy from old fashioned one liners to her version of Dr. Ruth, with a stop to discuss dysfunctional families she has known.

Being a comic and being gay have always gone together for Berger. She got kicked out of classes in high school for talking (what else?) and attended the American Academy of Dramatic Art. She came out during her second year in college, and after graduation, moved to San Francisco where she started an improv group, Static Cling.

She has appeared on FOX TV and Comedy Central as well as in comedy clubs from coast to coast. By day, Suzy works as a drama therapist. What is a drama therapist? According to Berger, "We show up late and make a scene." Actually, she uses drama therapeutically to encourage clients to act out feelings and express emotions.

In opening act position, Danielle, who charmed us at Camp Augusta, is now singing locally and was our February 1996 Successful SACWNite, will sing a variety of current contemporary tunes.

From the Steering Committee

First, an apology. Last month's newsletter was late. Your editor has been producing newsletters ten times a year since January 1993. Thirty-seven newsletters, by count, have been mailed on time, but last month, technical problems had us a week behind schedule. We are told that the post office then took their good old time delivering the precious first class bundle, especially in Davis. Sorry, we are working to avoid such a delay again.

Perhaps it was the newsletter delay, or the many other activities also happening in the lesbian community in September that caused the turnout for the Casino night to be small. The Sacramento Women's Chorus, who runs the bar at some SACWN events as a way to raise funds for their organization, had a lot of leftovers. (Luckily, beer doesn't spoil.) Our thanks to them for working hard preparing for the SACWN event. Again, everyone who did attend had a great time. Many volunteers helped out, dealing blackjack and calling bingo. Thanks to everyone for working to make the evening a fun time.

We have a great program for you in October, when we bring Suzy Berger to town for an evening of comedy. You will laugh till it hurts with Suzy's outrageous talent for finding the humor in our loves and lives. And our own Danielle will seduce you with her songs. Do invite your friends to this hilarious night of comedy.

Several of you have responded to the request for hostesses for the November potlucks. There is still time for the rest of you to volunteer. Here's how it works: On Saturday, November 23 at many locations around town, SACWN members will host a potluck for those in their neighborhood and surrounding area. It's a great way to get to know your SACWN neighbors. The November issue of the newsletter will list the zip codes and the volunteer hostess in that area. You look for the one closest to you and call to RSVP. The really important step is that you RSVP early so the hostess knows for sure that she has a reason to clean up the house. Several hostesses last year had heard from only one or two persons by the Thursday before the program, so they decided to cancel, only to have the phone ring off the hook on Friday, the day before the scheduled dinner. This one will take a little planning, so please consider your schedule early. It will be well worth it.

Special thanks to the new SIG facilitators that have started or re-started a SIG. Anne is heading up the CR SIG and Joy is bringing life back to the Book SIG. If you want to explore your current outlook on life or read a good book, be sure to check out the next page for more information.

Written by Jeanine McElwain

Mary WillAllen, director of the Sacramento Women's Chorus since 1992, brings out the best in her singers. While continually challenging them to experiment with unfamiliar rhythms, harmonies, ethnic styles, and sometimes foreign languages, she works to improve their breathing and music reading skills. She searches tirelessly for women-affirming music and writes arrangements which suit her group's vocal range. But she's only been out for five years.

Mary was born in Martinez, California, but spent her adolescence in a St. Louis boarding school to prepare her for her future role of wife and mother. Her proximity to the Ozarks prompted her to explore caves, hunt for fossils, and raise bats in her dorm room. She recalls many crushes on women and girls during those years, including the school nurse and an English teacher (who later became a nun). But her earliest lesbian memory is of being fascinated with a neighborhood hairdresser when she was five years old! "She drove a jeep", says Mary.

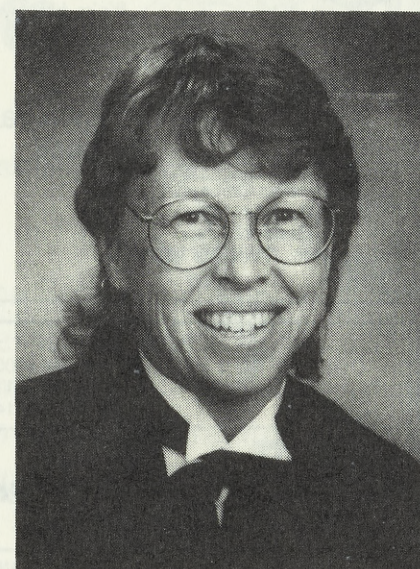

Nonetheless, she married in 1968 upon graduating from San Francisco State with a B.A. in music (harp). She later obtained her M.A. and a music teaching credential from CSU, Sacramento. Over the course of her 24 year marriage, she raised two daughters, taught school and participated in the ministry of the Church of Christ, Scientist. She says she and her husband had much in common, including "matching blind spots" when it came to understanding each other, or themselves. As the girls approached adulthood, it was they who led Mary toward acceptance of her sexuality, long suppressed, by discreetly leaving gay-related literature around the house. Coming out led her to realize that her younger daughter was gay too, which explained a lot about both of them!

Mary's therapist referred her to a gay client for her first meeting with an "out" lesbian, who handed her a "horribly Xeroxed copy" of the SACWN newsletter. There she saw an ad for a music director in the gay community, to which she responded. The chorus gave her a trial run in the spring of 1992 and, for the first time in her life, she felt immediate acceptance among a group of women. She was so thrilled with this sense of "coming home" that in short order she fell in love and initiated divorce proceedings.

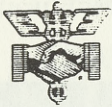

The chorus was an ironic twist of fate for her, as she had been unwillingly steered toward choruses (and away from orchestras) through most of her teaching career, simply because she was a woman. Her mounting frustration with the sexist attitudes of male administrators culminated in her "disastrous year" with a Sacramento high school women's chorus, which considered itself inferior to the mixed chorus (an attitude shared by the music department and by Mary herself, at the time, she reluctantly admits). To improve morale, she spent much of her time composing and arranging music that would appeal to her students. They eventually rallied to produce a small concert, but by the end of the year Mary had had enough of choral directing.

Teaching remained her calling however, along with a desire to help young girls excel in school, particularly in subjects traditionally dominated by boys. So she chose to pursue a second teaching credential in math. In the midst of her advanced math studies she discovered that she had a learning disability, which accounted for her lifelong struggle with reading. This also explained her difficulty with following the musical score while directing, as it involved repeatedly looking up and back down at the score, straining to find her place each time. And it explained her natural affinity for the learning disabled. She is now an instructional math assistant with the Learning Disability Department at American River College.

In 1993 Nikki Ruggiero, long time chorus member and current president, became Mary's loving partner just as her blossoming happiness was about to collide head on with a horrific nightmare: the loss of her younger daughter, at age 18, to a sudden bacterial infection during a school semester abroad. Determined to find out what happened, Mary hired a French attorney to battle apathetic French officials and medical personnel who took two years to determine the general cause of death, until her kindly attorney convinced her that reopening the investigation to search for

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1996 WORKSHOP WITH DR. JOANNE MARROW EXPLORING OUR SEXUAL SELVES

For the past two years, Joanne Marrow has led a sexuality workshop at SACWN's Women's Gathering at Camp Augusta. Following these sessions, participants have commented that there wasn't enough time or the right environment for women to talk honestly about their sexual selves and explore their feelings and emotions about sex. By request, Dr. Marrow has agreed to provide just such a workshop for SACWN members.

On Saturday, October 26 from 10 to 4 p.m., SACWN will sponsor a program, "Exploring Our Sexual Selves" with Dr. Marrow. Registration is limited to 20. Lunch will be provided. The workshop will be held at the SACWN office, 3031 F Street, Suite 201 in Sacramento.

To register, return the following form with your check for $45 by October 21. To pay by Visa and Mastercard, call the SACWN office at 451-8034.

SUCCESSFUL SACWNITE

more specific information would not only be extremely costly but would do nothing to ease the pain of Abigail's death. Mary sensed that Abbie too wouldn't want her mother to squander her resources on such a useless quest, but would rather she enjoy Madeline, her sister, who is now singing in the women's chorus! Mary credits her partner Nikki — and the support of the women's chorus—with getting her through the loss of her daughter.

Mary's definition of success? — "to work toward being completely honest and loving in my life," a process—rather than a goal—that includes every step along the way. "Even a four-year old can be successful," she says, meaning that wherever you are in your journey is where you need to be. She does not regret her marriage; she greatly enjoyed raising her daughters and her many opportunities to employ her creative talents. She says that, once she started composing and arranging music and discovering the importance of women in her life, "there was no stopping me." For Mary, success involves growth, self discovery, and the freedom to be creative. The chorus would add that it includes nurturing others to stretch and grow in a celebration of the beauty and power of women's voices.
